Supporters of the US Women's World Cup soccer team watch at a sports bar / GETTY IMAGES

Is the Women's World Cup getting attention?

Fans. A supporter wants people to pay more attention to the sport to help build role models for young girls.

Debbie Moulder wasn't always a soccer fan.

But women's soccer became something of an obsession for the six girls in the blended family she shares with her husband in Ardmore. So, earlier this month, the pair headed to the Fado, which is, arguably, the city's biggest soccer bar. They wanted to check out a U.S. vs Nigeria match in the FIFA Women's World Cup.

More importantly, they wanted to see if it was a good place to take the girls.

"It would be nice to be able to bring the girls out and see these games and see the enthusiasm that you see for some of these men's sports," Moulder said.

There was only one problem: The bar was closed for a private party.

As the U.S. Women's National Team played its first knockout round game in the World Cup Monday night, fans like Moulder wondered if the women's competition was getting the respect and attention it deserves.

"Would Fado's close during the men's World Cup? Of course not," Moulder said. "But who will notice for the Women's World Cup?"

Quoted

"Would Fado's close during the men's World Cup? Of course not. But who will notice for the Women's World Cup?" Moulder

Fado's general manager, Stephanie Henry, said the private party had been planned for two years by a national client that had booked parties at Fado's in other cities.

If the bar's buyout was largely outside of Fado's control, Moulder points out that TV schedules are set years in advance for Women's World Cup games.

Reuters reports that television viewership for the early Women's World Cup matches in Canada saw a strong increase in many countries compared with the last competition in 2011, doubling or tripling in major markets like the United States and China.

Fox Sports, which is airing all 52 games live, is expected to raise ad revenue of more than $30 million, a person familiar with the matter told Reuters.

That dwarfs the $6 million reportedly earned by ESPN in 2011, according to consumer data group Kantar Media, but is still a tiny fraction of the $525 million in U.S. ad revenue generated by the men's World Cup in 2014.

The difference in enthusiasm between the men's and women's tournaments is palpable at retail stores that sell jerseys and apparel. Last year, stores were festooned with banners celebrating the U.S. Mens National Team. While women's jerseys are for sale, those displays are much smaller. Retail managers say that is driven by demand.

"Most of the people that come in looking for Women's World Cup stuff are looking for children's stuff, and we don't carry children's sizes," said Megan Urban, a fan of the U.S. women's team and a salesperson at City Sports in Center City. "I definitely feel like the women's tournament has a younger fan base."

Shocking. Video shows freight train slamming into car

A screenshot from the video / PROVIDED

A wild video shows a freight train slamming into an SUV that had become stuck on train tracks in Newark, Delaware — but it's what the video didn't capture that might be more important.

Two Newark police officers pulled the driver from the vehicle just before the train hit, police said.

The officers were working a private security detail Sunday at around 11 p.m. at a nearby bar when they noticed the vehicle.

The 76-year-old driver had turned onto the gravel bed on the train tracks and become stuck.

The officers called 911 and went into action. When they reached the car, the flashing lights indicating an oncoming train began signaling. They pulled the man from the car, the station reported. The freight train sent the car 100 feet.

Police say alcohol was not a factor in the accident. There were no reported injuries. METRO

Scandal. Teacher sent nude Snapchats to student, police say

A special education teacher is facing criminal charges after she allegedly shared nude photos with a student who passed the pictures around the school.

Megan Clough, 29, of Susquehanna, a town about 170 miles north of Philadelphia, was charged on Friday with institutional sexual assault, WNEP reported.

The charge applies when the victim is older than 18, but is still a student.

Clough, a teacher at Mountain View High School, reportedly sent five or six nude images of herself via Snapchat to at least one student.

While Snapchat messages usually disappear after being viewed, these images were saved by some students and shared around the school, reports say.

One picture of Clough was reportedly captioned: "How is this something you want to see?"

Clough / PROVIDED

Clough reportedly later admitted to police she had sex with a student in her home in March, saying, "I guess I had feelings for him."

Students told media that the teacher's relationship with a student was an open secret in the school.

A parent reported the relationship to authorities, at which point the principal referred the case to the state police department.

Rush to boost cellular towers for pope's visit

Wireless. All of the major carriers are increasing cell capacity for Pope Francis' arrival.

Cell service will be at capacity thanks to papal selfies. / GETTY IMAGES

As anyone who has ever attended an event with more than hundreds of thousands of people knows, cellphone service can become completely jammed.

Local carriers are on overdrive to stop that from happening in Philly when Pope Francis is expected to attract more than a million visitors.

Verizon, Sprint and AT&T all confirmed that they will be adding additional cellular service capacity to their networks, including in the form of mobile units.

"Verizon will "deploy additional "temporary" assets to boost our ability to handle increased voice and data usage that we know we will see with an event of this unprecedented scale," said spokesman Sheldon Jones.

Jones said Verizon would be sending mobile cell-service enhancement devices to the areas where the most people congregate.

AT&T spokeswoman Brandy Bell-Truskey said they are also planning "a number of temporary wireless network enhancements to help support the expected massive crowds who want to call, text, post and tweet from this historic event."

Sprint currently plans to deploy four Cell on Wheels units to serve the Jumbotron area where Pope Francis' Sunday mass will be displayed, and for other high-usage locations during the World Meeting of Families.

Spokesman Scott Sloat said they will be increasing the capacity of cell sites in the area of the Art Museum and Independence Mall for pope-related crowds.

Comcast spokesman Jeff Alexander said plans were still taking shape.

"We're working with the World Meeting of Families organizers to determine needs and best ways to serve attendees but don't have details to share at this time," he said.

ASK SEPTA: TROLLEY TIME

Ask SEPTA

JOE CASEY

SEPTA GENERAL MANAGER

Send your questions about SEPTA services and other issues about the transit agency to christina.paciolla@metro.us. They will be forwarded to Joe Casey who will answer them in a special monthly column here.

Why is the 15 trolley never on time? I am a regular rider of the 15. In the mornings and afternoons, I'm on a tight schedule, and I transfer from the 15 to another bus. When I say this line is never on time, I don't just mean late by a few minutes — I mean I've waited up to 30 minutes for a trolley. I have the SEPTA app and not once has the 15 arrived according to schedule.

We monitor all our routes, including the Route 15, for on-time performance. This is accomplished through our GPS technology and sight observations by our street supervisors. Currently, because of a large track replacement effort, bus substitution is in place along portions of the Route 15.

For the period of January 2015 through May 2015, the overall on-time percentage for the entire route was 78 percent. This was due to the track replacement project and new traffic patterns on Girard Avenue created by the ongoing construction project on I-95.

We will continue to monitor the Route 15 and make adjustments to the schedule to manage and correct lateness concerns. We regret any inconvenience these performance issues have created for you.

Can you tell me about climate control on SEPTA Regional Rail? During the winter, the heat was never sufficiently high. I had to buy a new, warmer coat just for my commutes. Now, the weather has warmed up, and the air conditioning is blasting as cold as ever. The regional rail conductors wear sweaters and jackets when it's in the 80s outside, clearly because the train cars are so cold. ... I have a very long commute and find it very frustrating to spend the majority of that commute miserable every day.

All Regional Rail cars are equipped with a climate control system that regulates the interior temperature between 68 and 72 degrees. This system regulates the interior car temperatures all year round, regardless of how hot or cold it is outside. However, during the summer and winter months, when doors are opened and closed frequently, there will be constant variations to the internal temperature.

Why is SEPTA putting anti-Muslim ads on its buses? Are you people trying to get us blown up? This is very irresponsible of SEPTA.

SEPTA rejected the ads you are referring to; however, a federal court judge ruled that the First Amendment required SEPTA to accept the controversial ads from a group seeking to purchase advertising space on SEPTA even though the ads may be disparaging to riders and SEPTA employees.

NY manhunt focuses on cabin 20 miles from prison

Area. Police cautioned camp owners in the area to be on the lookout for anything suspicious.

The 2-week-old search for two escaped murderers focused on a rural area about 20 miles away from the upstate New York prison they fled, authorities said on Monday, after evidence reportedly showed the pair had been inside a burglarized cabin.

CNN, citing an unidentified law enforcement source, said the escapees' DNA was found on items in a cabin in Owls Head, New York.

New York State Police said items from the cabin were being tested for DNA, but at a midday news conference, Maj. Charles Guess would not confirm the DNA of the two convicts had been found.

He said he did not want to jeopardize the investigation.

"It's a confirmed lead for us," Guess said.

Convicted murderers Richard Matt, 48, and David Sweat, 35, were discovered missing from the maximum-security Clinton Correctional Facility in Dannemora, New York, early on June 6.

The two inmates cut through cell walls, crawled through a steam pipe and climbed out a manhole to escape, officials said.

A witness reported seeing someone running into a wooded area over the weekend near the cabin that had been broken into, CNN reported.

Guess, at the news conference in Cadyville, New York, said police had followed up on 2,000 leads in the case.

He said there was no evidence the escapees were getting help from anyone while they were on the run but said police had not ruled it out.

Joyce Mitchell, 51, who worked as a training supervisor in the prison's tailor shop, has been charged with helping the inmates escape by providing them with tools.

A Clinton corrections officer identified as Gene Palmer has been suspended in connection with the escape. REUTERS

Senate committee

Takata may have put profits before safety

Air bag maker Takata Corp. may have put profits before safety, a U.S. Senate committee said in a report released on Monday.

The report by the Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation was released the day before a Washington hearing on Takata's defective inflators, which are linked to more than 100 injuries and at least eight deaths globally because of air bags that deploy with too much force and spray metal shards at passengers.

"Internal emails obtained by the committee suggest that Takata may have prioritized profit over safety by halting global safety audits for financial reasons," the committee said in its report.

The committee said company emails indicate global safety audits were halted from 2009 to 2011 "due to financial reasons."

A spokesman for Takata could not immediately be reached for comment. REUTERS

Court. Man who flew gyrocopter to Capitol rejects plea deal

A Florida man who flew a gyrocopter onto the U.S. Capitol grounds rejected a plea deal on Monday that would likely involve jail time, prosecutors said.

Douglas Hughes, a 61-year-old mail carrier from Ruskin, Florida, appeared in federal court where he turned down a plea deal, according to a spokesman for Assistant U.S. Attorney Tejpal Chawla.

Hughes told reporters outside the courthouse that he would not accept a plea deal that would involve several years of prison time, and called his illegal flight a "pure act of civil disobedience," according to the Washington Post.

His April 15 stunt was aimed at drawing attention to the need for campaign finance reform.

Hughes was arrested after piloting the craft from Pennsylvania and landing on the west lawn of the Capitol as police and tourists looked on. He was carrying a letter for each of the 535 members of Congress.

Hughes faces six charges, including violating the registration requirements for an aircraft and national defense airspace. He pleaded not guilty in May to charges of lacking a pilot's certificate or registration for the craft.

If convicted of all charges, he could be sentenced to up to nine and a half years in prison. REUTERS

S. Carolina governor calls for the removal of Confederate flag

South Carolina Gov. Nikki Haley and other lawmakers and activists deliver a statement to the media asking that the Confederate flag be removed from the state Capitol. / GETTY IMAGES

South Carolina Gov. Nikki Haley on Monday called on lawmakers to take down the Confederate battle flag in the state Capitol, a week after a white gunman allegedly shot dead nine black worshipers at a historic church.

The flag was a symbol of the pro-slavery South during the U.S. Civil War. "This is a moment in which we can say that the flag, while an integral part of our past, does not represent the future of our great state."

Quoted

"It's time to move the flag from the capitol grounds." Haley

The shooting at Emanuel African Methodist Episcopal Church came in a year of intense debate over U.S. race relations following the killings of unarmed black men by police officers, which has sparked a reinvigorated civil rights movement under the "Black Lives Matter" banner.

Opponents of flying the flag at the State House grounds consider it an emblem of slavery that has become a rallying symbol for racism and xenophobia in the United States. Supporters, who fly the flag at their homes, wear it on clothing and put it on bumper stickers, say it is a symbol of the South's history and culture, as well a memorial to the roughly 480,000 Confederate Civil War casualties. That figure includes the dead, wounded and prisoners.

Convicted killer. Jodi Arias ordered to pay $30,000 to victim's family

Jodi Arias / ARIZONA DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS HANDOUT

An Arizona judge on Monday ordered convicted murderer Jodi Arias to pay about $30,000 to the family of the ex-boyfriend she shot and stabbed to death in 2008, court officials said.

Judge Sherry Stephens granted the amount to help cover expenses incurred by five of victim Travis Alexander's siblings, making the ruling during a restitution hearing in Maricopa County Superior Court in Phoenix.

Arias, 34, waived her right to appear at the hearing. She was sentenced in April to life in prison without the possibility of parole for the murder of Alexander, who was found slumped in a shower at his Phoenix-area home.

The former waitress from California, who was convicted in May 2013, was sentenced by Stephens after two separate juries deadlocked on whether she should be put to death for the crime.

Members of the victim's family were also absent from court for the hearing. An attorney for the Alexander family did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

Arias is being held at a state prison west of Phoenix following her sentencing, which concluded a trial that gripped the public with its gruesome and sex-laced testimony.

She was found guilty of stabbing her 30-year-old former lover nearly 30 times, slitting his throat almost from ear to ear and shooting him in the face.

Arias said she acted in self-defense and had been fighting for her life. Prosecutors said she killed him in a jealous rage.

She has appealed her conviction, court records show. REUTERS

Five things you need to know

1 President Obama says the N-word on podcast

President Barack Obama, during a podcast posted online on Monday, used the N-word to emphasize his point that the United States has made progress in eliminating racism, but there was still more work to do.

Obama discussed race and gun control as part of the hour-long podcast interview, in the aftermath of the shooting deaths a week ago of nine black people at a church in South Carolina, allegedly by a 21-year-old white man with racist sentiments.

"I always tell young people in particular: 'Do not say that nothing's changed when it comes to race in America unless you lived through being a black man in the 1950s or '60s or '70s,'" Obama told Mark Maron, host of the "WTF" podcast.

He said the legacies of slavery and discrimination were still "part of our DNA that's passed on."

"We're not cured of it ... and it's not just a matter of it not being polite to say 'nigger' in public. That's not the measure of whether racism still exists or not. It's not just a matter of overt discrimination," he said.

"Societies don't just overnight completely erase everything that happened two to 300 years prior." REUTERS

2 Top Court rules for Marvel in toy dispute

The Supreme Court ruled against the inventor of a Spider-Man toy by quoting a famous line associated with the comic book superhero about how with great power comes great responsibility.

Justice Elena Kagan cited the line in explaining why the court, in a 6-3 ruling, had declined to overrule a legal precedent more than half a century old concerning patent royalties.

The court decided in favor of Marvel Entertainment LLC in its legal fight with Stephen Kimble and an associate, Robert Grabb, over royalties on a web-shooting toy called the Spider-Man Web Blaster. REUTERS

3 Ancient jawbone sheds light on Neanderthal interbreeding

You may not know it, but you probably have some Neanderthal in you. For people around the world, except sub-Saharan Africans, about 1 to 3 percent of their DNA comes from Neanderthals, our close cousins who disappeared 39,000 years ago.

Scientists said a jawbone, unearthed in Romania, of a man who lived about 40,000 years ago, boasts the most Neanderthal ancestry ever seen in our species.

The finding also indicates that interbreeding with Neanderthals occurred much more recently than previously known. REUTERS

4 North Carolina man charged in plot to kill for Islamic State

A North Carolina man has been charged with an alleged plot to buy a semiautomatic rifle, which he planned to use to kill Americans to show his support for the Islamic State militant group, the U.S. Department of Justice said.

Justin Nojan Sullivan, 19, of Morganton, North Carolina, who was arrested Friday, is due to appear in federal court in Charlotte, said the U.S. Attorney's Office for the Western District of North Carolina.

Sullivan is charged with one count of attempting to provide material support to Islamic State and two counts of weapons charges. REUTERS

5 Amazon to pay self-published authors based on pages read

It could soon pay more to write lengthier books if you are an author self-publishing on Amazon's Kindle e-book platform.

Starting next month, the e-commerce giant will pay independent authors based on the number of pages read rather than the number of times their book has been borrowed.

Amazon's Kindle Direct Publishing platform lets authors set list prices, decide rights and edit the book at any time. REUTERS

1 More baby names for Kimye's impending son

Since Kim Kardashian decided to let loose on Twitter about the fact that her and Kanye West's next baby is going to be a boy, I thought I might as well update the list of prospective baby names I so generously offered up to the happy couple. (What can I say? I'm a giver.) Clearly some of the earlier entries would only make sense for a daughter — like Hillary Rodham or Baby™ — but I still stand by Kim Jr. as the best option. Just in case Kim and Kanye disagree, here are some alternatives:

- North 2 West
- Slanket West
- Bruce West
- Mini Kanye West
- Verizon Wireless Presents Baby West
- Cornell West
- The North Remembers West
- Writers Guild of America West
- The Right Honorable Cornelius Humphrey West, the Fourth
- Vuitton West

2 Janet Jackson is back

Janet Jackson's still got it. The singer released a new song yesterday called "No Sleeep," — no, that's not a typo, apparently it's just the "cool" way to spell it these days. Miss Jackson even Tweeted, "I dedicate this to My Love." As you might be able to conclude from the song's title, the lyrics are about looking forward to a restless night with a lover. It's the first single off the singer's upcoming album and her first song in seven years. Musically, "No Sleeep" is classic Janet Jackson, with her soft, come-hither voice reigning over layered electronic instruments. She hasn't strayed far from what worked for her in the past, and somehow it feels new again. EMILY LAURENCE

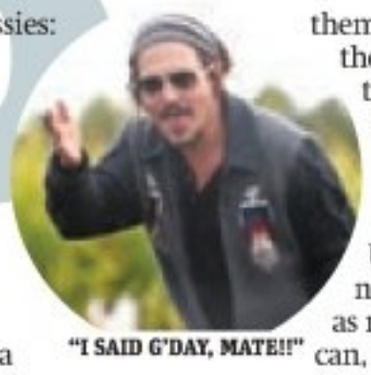
3 Amber Heard and Johnny Depp are through with Australia



"I SAID G'DAY, MATE!!"

Take note, Aussies: Threatening to euthanize Johnny Depp's dogs and throw the "Pirates of the Caribbean" star in jail certainly won't get you a nice Trip Advisor review from his wife, Amber Heard. In fact, Heard suggests the couple will be steering clear of Australia from now on following Minister for Agriculture Barnaby Joyce's fuss over them sneaking the dogs into the country. "I have a feeling we're going to avoid the Land Down Under from now on, just as much as we can, thanks to certain politicians there," Heard said during an interview with Sunrise. "I guess everyone tries to go for their 15 minutes [of fame], including some government officials." Oo, burn.

Street Fighter elevator prank

This "fun" little "prank" is actually borderline terrifying for the unsuspecting victims who step into an elevator with a man dressed like Ryu from "Street Fighter" who then proceeds to fake-hadouken them. It's very nearly a great example of why pranking should be left to the professionals. But half the fun is waiting for someone to really react poorly to getting pretend punched and kicked. The other half? When his female accomplice dressed as Chun Li shows up. Chun Li makes everything better.

Hilary Duff is back

Comeback. She talks to us about her new album "Breathe In. Breathe Out." and signing up for Tinder.

We'd swipe right. / GETTY IMAGES

Hilary Duff has come a long way since making a name for herself in Disney's "Lizzie McGuire." For one, she has a 3-year-old son named Luca with her ex, former NHL player Mike Comrie. But bad breakups make for good songwriting material, and that's just what the 27-year-old Duff has done with her new album "Breathe In. Breathe Out." Clearly, the singer had romance in mind with her single "Sparks," fueled by her recent foray into the dating app Tinder. Here, Duff talks to us about music and matches.

You've worked with Ed Sheeran but also with Swedish pop artist Tove Lo. What did you want her to bring to the album?

Tove Lo is a very different artist than I am. She is so incredibly talented, and she's collaborated with great artists before. When I heard "Sparks," which she wrote, I just felt like it was a fresh sound. I think she really brings an edge to my record.

Hilary Duff plays Kelsey Peters on the TV Land show "Younger." / TV LAND

Getting "Younger"

Your new show "Younger" got renewed for a second season. What did you like about your character, Kelsey Peters?

I'm such a [creator and producer] Darren Star fan, and the show really has his mark on it. I really connected with all of the women on the show, and I got excited to play a character that was very driven in the working world. She also makes mistakes — she is in her 20s, and this is what your 20s are all about: learning who you are, fighting for your place and making mistakes. I'm happy to be in a show with such inspiring female roles, and I love that it is about reinventing yourself at any age.

this album that is particularly special for you?
"Brave Heart" is really special for me. It's about what I was going through in my personal life at the time, and I feel like a lot of people will be able to relate to it. It's an uplifting song about being scared of the unknown and wanting to take a chance.

You started a serious buzz about being on Tinder. Was it just for the "Sparks" music video or are you actually serious about it?
When I first joined Tinder, it had nothing to do with the video — it was just for fun. ... And it has been fun! I'm not trying to look for love. I joined just to do something that people wouldn't think I would do. It was to surprise people, surprise myself and be a part of something that is going on in the world, and that is so normal these days.

Any successful encounters yet?
I still talk to one guy. It's funny — I don't think it's going to be a love match, but we are definitely good friends. It was a good social experience!

Since you are now a Tinder pro, can you tell us what's a good profile picture for Tinder?
Do a selfie and try to get an above angle. Hold the camera up and then face it down; it always looks good.

What's a good Tinder date outfit?
For any date, I'd say try and look like you've put a bit of effort in but nothing too over-the-top.

Rounding up 'The Wolfpack'

Interview. Crystal Moselle talks about how she came to film the crazy story that made one of this year's big docs.

The boys of "The Wolfpack," out now, are seen during one of their most beloved activities: rewatching their favorite movies.
MAGNOLIA PICTURES

In 2010, documentarian Crystal Moselle spotted six brothers walking down First Avenue. They became the subjects of "The Wolfpack," which details how the movie-crazy boys spent years not allowed, with rare exceptions, to leave their LES high-rise, at the behest of their overprotective parents. Since the film's debut at Sundance, where it won the Grand Jury Prize, the brothers have become more used to being outside, some going into film jobs.

When you learned about certain secrets, did you suddenly become nervous about having that responsibility?
Oh, yeah. Oh, God. I felt it immediately. The first time I suspected it, we were at this pizza place. Makunda gave me a little clue. I think he wanted to open up to me. He told me about how he escaped — that one day he walked out of the house in a Michael Myers mask. I was like, "What? Why did you do that?" He broke down. I realized there was something more delicate and complex here — that this was a serious thing. It immediately made me feel protective of them and their story.

How did the boys react to seeing themselves on a screen, especially scenes of their even younger selves?
Not all of them have seen the film. Govinda and Narayana are actually pretty nervous about seeing themselves onscreen. But everyone else in the family has watched it. They think it's a pretty honest portrayal of what happened. Makunda said that, when he watched the film, he felt like he had gone through 100 years of therapy, and he's all better now.

It is surprising — and relieving — when they start stepping outside, and they seem to actually be OK talking to other people.
One time, Makunda said to me, "I have a hard time meeting people. I never know what to talk about." I asked him, "What do you know the most about?" He said, "Movies." I said, "Well, everyone loves movies, and everyone wants to talk about them. Maybe ask people what their favorite movie is." And it works. He told me later he was at a party, and he asked every single person in the room what their favorite movie was.

How to serve fish at home

First of all, get over the smell. "[Americans] weren't brought up as a seafood-eating country," says Moonen. "Fish is just not what dinner smells like." If it does bother you, put out a cup of vinegar. When it comes to cooking the fish, poaching it in liquid is one way that's not going to put off a lot of fish oil. And if you're totally new to it, broiling is the easiest method: Season your fillet with salt, pepper and olive oil, then put it on a flat cast-iron griddle on a high shelf in the broiler.

How letting sustainability guide your diet will lead to better seafood for everyone.

EVA KIS
eva.kis@metro.us

What would it take to make American seafood sustainable? Eating more of it is a good start — if you're getting it from the right places.

The seemingly disparate issues of scarcity and abundance both pose problems for the future of seafood in the U.S. We're eating too specifically among the varieties available to us: Late last month, Forbes reported that big-name chefs including Tom Colicchio are banding together to stop serving striped bass, stocks of which are down 85 percent this year.

At the same time, the seafood we have in abundance is problematic, too. Ninety percent of it comes from overseas, caught and processed in conditions that are often unverified. Last year, the Associated Press found that Burmese men are being enslaved to work on Thai fishing boats whose cargo is sold in American supermarkets.

It's time to change the way we eat seafood. Where we buy it is a good start: Local businesses such as Village Fishmonger in NYC, which operates like a CSA for seafood, are not only serving what's coming from local farms and waters, but they also care about sustainability, from stocks to fishing methods. But eating a broader range of fish and demanding better catch methods with our dollars are part of it, too. We asked two of the big names behind the movement about how we can eat better seafood.

Eat local

"You wouldn't know it from visiting the supermarket, but there are over 300 varieties of fish in the lakes, rivers and oceans of the Northeast," says Sean Dixon, founder of Village Fishmonger.

So eating locally is not an issue of supply, but of opening your mind to new varieties. And, adds chef Rick Moonen, a 20-year advocate of sustainability in seafood, eating locally helps fish everywhere: "Fish caught locally are rarely going to be on the endangered species list," unlike bluefin tuna, which, at the rate we're eating it, could become extinct within our lifetime.

"Diversify your diet, because by doing so, you're relieving a fish that we're loving to death," Moonen says.

Eat smarter

"You can't play this ebb-and-flow game," Moonen says of the cycle of overfishing and then using bans to allow a species to rebound. Monkfish used to be unsustainable, but now they're available again; Atlantic cod is pretty much fished out; halibut is not deemed sustainable from the Atlantic, though the Pacific population fares better because of regulations. "We want more straight-line solutions," he says. That means choosing brands or fishmongers whose sourcing, methods and even employment policies are transparent, and looking for certification, which verifies the health and safety of fish (and the people who catch them).

Get low

When it comes to overlooked seafood, the experts say dive deep. "Fish that are a little bit lower on the food chain encompass everything we're concerned about," Moonen says. "They have little to no concentration of PCBs [an endocrine disruptor] and methyl mercury." Fish like mackerel, sardines and anchovies are all underappreciated. ("Eat bait," he sums up.)

For one of the biggest bangs for your nutrition buck, "having a delicious oyster is going to be one of the best bets you can make," adds Dixon. "Oyster fisheries create habitat, they clean the water, they're local, they're near shore, they're low carbon."

Rethink farmed fish

About half of the world's fish stocks come from farmed sources, and there are plenty of fisheries and hatcheries doing good work. Moonen supports a company called True North Salmon Company, whose "farm" in New Brunswick reintroduced salmon into a habitat from which they had been wiped out. "It's not technology trying to muscle nature into doing what they want; they're working with nature now," says Moonen.

To check on the welfare of your favorite fish, Dixon recommends going to FishWatch.gov.

Charging for sex is prostitution

Re: 'Meet Jara' (Metro.us)
I couldn't care less about transgender, gay, straight, black, white, etc. To me, race, sexual orientation and sexual identity should be free and unwavering to all with no worry of backlash or hate. What I do care about is how this woman who claims she takes $2,000 from a man for a "full overnight stay with her" is claiming she's an entrepreneur and not a prostitute. I seriously doubt they're playing Scrabble. Firstly, a person (male or female) who has sex for money is a prostitute. Sorry to burst her bubble, but that's the definition. Secondly, prostitution is illegal here.

Bad flags must go

My great-great-grandfather fought and died in the Civil War to free those people erroneously put into slavery. Now, coming up on 200 years later, a Southern state is still flying its Confederate flag?

Worse, that state, South Carolina, started to fly it during the Martin Luther King era! I am so proud that my heritage includes the fight for freedom. I am sorry we are apparently still fighting the war.

That flag must come down now. Thank you, Metro, so very much for helping us have actual conversations in the letters to the editor, not mere tweet-offs as AMNY espouses.

MACNOW: IT'S TIME FOR PHILS' SANDBERG TO GO

Sandberg has a record of 117-158 managing the Phils. / GETTY IMAGES

We all forecast this to be the Phillies' Hindenburg season. Crash. Burn. One hundred losses. Countdown to Eagles kickoff.

Somehow, it's turning out worse.

Incredibly, the dreck that Ruben Amaro assembled and Ryne Sandberg directs has been more dreadful than we envisioned. Look at the numbers: 23 losses in 29 games; last in the Major Leagues in runs scored and run differential. Among the worst in nearly every category in hitting, fielding and pitching.

After a week in which they lost three games by a combined score of 41-8, something's got to give. Some change may be imminent. President Pat Gillick virtually confirmed Sunday the club plans to hire veteran baseball exec Andy MacPhail to tow this truck out of the ditch. Assuming that occurs before mid-July, MacPhail will neuter Amaro and handle the all-critical trade moves that will reshape the franchise.

Macnow on the Phillies

"Another three-plus months of this zombie horror show would be unfair to fans, players — hell, even to Franzke and LA."

But what about Sandberg? We all agree the manager has been dealt a tough hand, but is he the right guy to lead this sorry mess even through the rest of the season?

I say no. I say the Hall of Fame second baseman needs to clean out his office now. And make sure he packs up pitching coach Bob McClure while stuffing everything else in moving boxes.

The sins of Sandberg are too many to fit into this short column. For a man regarded as a heady player, he has shown an innate ability to mismanage game situations. The "fundamentals manager" presides over a cast that can't even navigate a sacrifice bunt. He has misused relievers, alienated players both young and old and — by Gillick's own admission — failed to protect Maikel Franco last week when the rookie third baseman was run for arguing with umpires.

Franco is among several youngsters on this squad who could use a guiding hand. But take a look into the dugout during games. You never, ever see the manager talking to his young charges. By some accounts, there are nights when Sandberg utters fewer than 100 words between the first and ninth innings.

The nadir, of course, came last Tuesday. Sandberg and McClure impotently waved the white towel toward a sleeping bullpen — an image that will be tied to them like Richie Kotite's two-point chart running in the rain. What followed was Chase Utley lambasting McClure in front of the world. As Inquirer columnist Bob Ford so brilliantly wrote, that was the instant Sandberg lost his currency with this group of 25.

How will recent setbacks affect 76ers' draft plans?

NBA. What will the Sixers do, now that they could be without both Joel Embiid and Dario Saric next season?

When will Noel and Embiid take the court together? It's anyone's guess. / GETTY IMAGES

As the 2014-15 season came careening to an end, 76ers coach Brett Brown was optimistic.

And rightfully so.

Nerlens Noel would be back in 2015-16 with experience. Tony Wroten would likely be back. Potential cornerstone center Joel Embiid would be slowly making his way into the lineup. Dario Saric would be one year close to joining the Sixers, giving them an imposing frontcourt of Noel, Embiid and Saric.

Well … about that optimism? Noel is healthy. That's good news.

But Embiid's right foot hasn't healed as quickly as the franchise had hoped. In fact, his status is unclear and it's even conceivable he could miss a second full season. Ouch.

"We're trying to figure out, with a 21-year-old, how do you focus wholly on long-term health and wellness and make sure he's OK," Sixers CEO Scott O'Neil said recently on Comcast SportsNet's 'Breakfast On Broad.' "So what we're doing now is seeing experts, the best experts from around the world to make sure we make the right decisions with him and his family and do the best."

Embiid is the key to the rebuild of the Sixers, who have won a combined 37 games the last two seasons.

"We're still waiting," O'Neil said on the show. "We have another three doctors to come see him. The nice thing about jobs like these — you can literally get the best experts in the world. All you have to do is call and they would love to see us."

Saric, who was picked by the Sixers in the first round (12th overall) of the 2014 draft, was believed to be possibly joining the team this season. Now, it could be at least two more years. Saric's agent Jeff Schwartz told ESPN.com that Saric will stay with his team in Turkey and definitely won't play for the Sixers this season.

With the draft approaching on Thursday night, the Sixers have a variety of options. ESPN.com's Chad Ford reported that Sixers GM Sam Hinkie is leaning toward 7-foot-1 Kristaps Porzingis instead of guards D'Angelo Russell or Emmanuel Mudiay.

With Hinkie's history, no one truly knows what will happen. But selecting Porzingis would be a fascinating choice considering the murky future of Embiid and Saric.

What was supposed to be an intriguing season on the horizon suddenly could be maddening once again.

Without Embiid and Saric, the Sixers will be challenged on a daily basis.

Brown said that wins will be vital this season. Without an improved roster from top to bottom, this will be a tough task.

The Sixers will surely be active on draft night with one first round pick and five choices in the second round. Trades are always a possibility with Hinkie.

With the frustrating news lately, the fans could use more reasons to be optimistic.
